What goes where?

Understanding stairparts

Keeping it simple

Staircases may be all sorts of sizes and arrangements to suit different properties and spaces but the main parts which go up to make any staircase are fairly common.

Here we've highlighted the key parts that will help you avoid any confusion when planning your new staircase.

www.planyourstairs.co.uk

plan your stairs

Landing return
The flat area of flooring usually at a right angle to the top of a staircase leading to rooms.

Spindle/Baluster
The vertical infill between the handrail and baserail (or the tread if on open string stair).

Closed string staircase
When a stair has a closed string, the treads and risers are housed inside the string, with no visible outside profile.

Baserail
Runs parallel to the handrail at the base of the spindles.

Half newel post
The large post that fits against the wall on the landing.

Handrail
This runs diagonally with the pitch of the stairs on top of the spindles.

Open string staircase
A string where the upper edge follows the shape of the treads and risers. Here the steps can be seen in profile.

Newel cap
Set on top of the newel post.

Newel posts
The structural post that fits at the beginning and end of the staircase and supports the handrail.

Tread
The top or horizontal surface of a step.

Riser
The vertical part of a step.
